Working Group Purpose/Charges

Findings

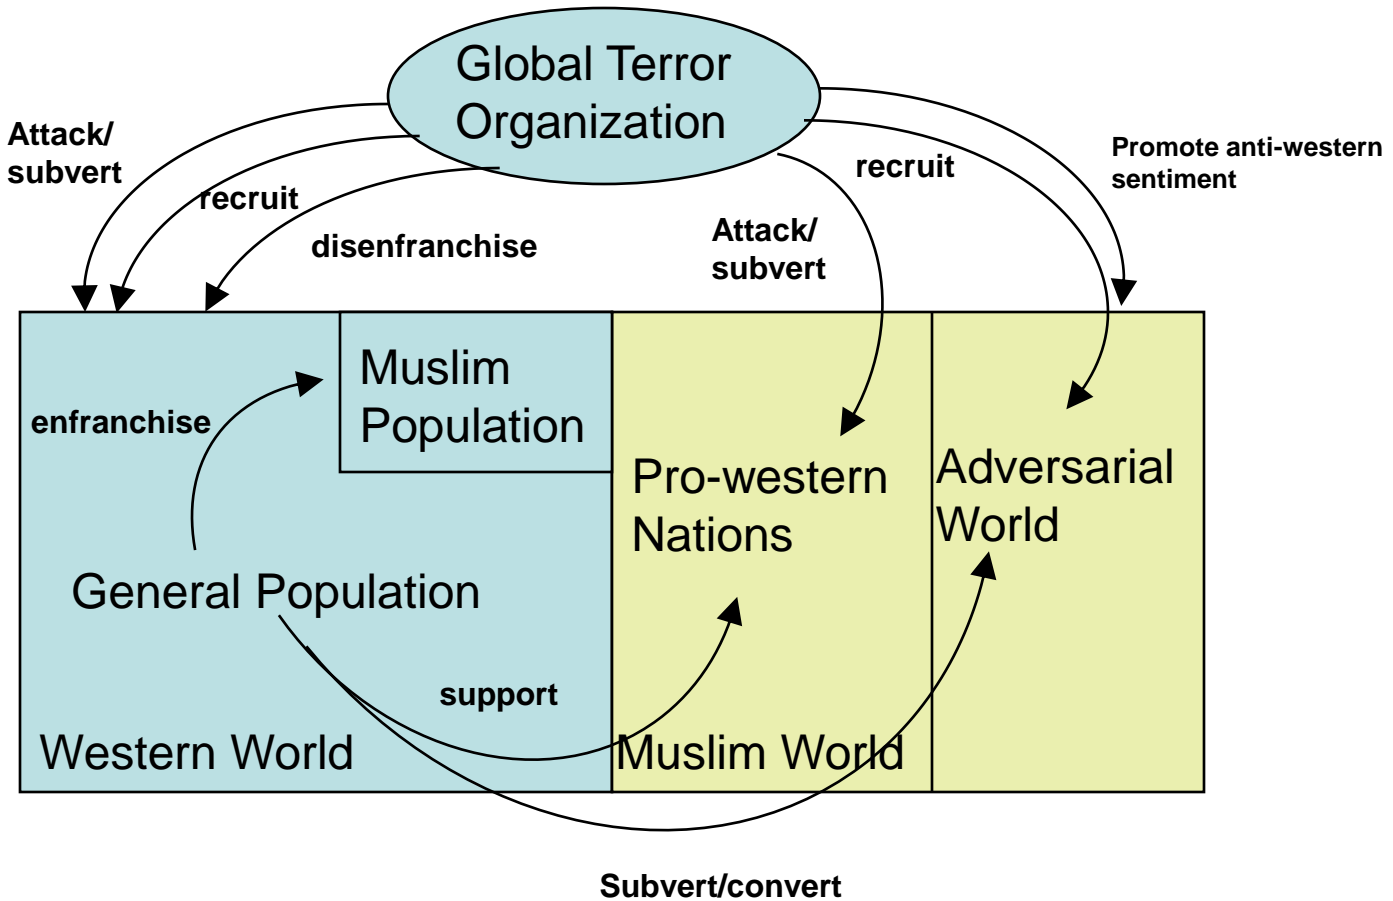

- Many ways to see/represent IW – different languages/logic
- Lack of common terms/understanding about IW
- IW analysis at strategic/operational/tactical may require different cognitive models/techniques/representations
- Modeling is difficult – must learn to think differently
- Focus on uncovering indirect opportunities
- Need tools to improve research capabilities that enhance thought and shared understanding
- Need decision makers to shape/provide guidance:
 - frame problem
 - visualization – make the whiteboard a “group thinking pad”
 - acquire a depth of understanding
- The SOD process:
 - requires continuous learning
 - provides insight, not answers
 - expect some risks
 - Identifies what we know and don’t know about the problem

Way Forward

- We've only scratched the surface
- Continue SOD exercise
- Establish a Community of Interest (COI)
- Take advantage of USSOCOM J-10 bi-weekly VTC
- Explore collaboration site

Key WG-5 Take-Aways

- 3 key ideas from SOD that are critical in all IW analysis
 - Need to revisit/reframe the problem statement

“It often occurs that the major contribution of the operations research worker is to decide what is the real problem.” -- Morse and Kimball

- “Problem Definition is an Iterative Process” Dr Roy Rice, FS, MORS Tutorial on “Step #1 of the Scientific Method: Defining the Problem”
 - Need to revisit assumptions
 - Discourse with SMEs, leaders is essential to SOD and good analysis

Bottom line: you cannot analyze IW in a single-pass linear process

- A "visual thinking pad" (dry erase board) is used to enable thinking and to capture the group's rationalization. This is really a cognitive exercise, hopefully resulting in a group synthesis. The group should ask itself, How are we thinking about this problem? and then ask, How should we be thinking about this problem? A mental model (a representation of the group's thinking and learning) is then captured to enable thinking- and hopefully is a useful representation to enable/capture insight.
